Correction

In the Sept. 14 issue, an article on the nationwide distribution of an AIDS pamphlet developed at Columbia contained several errors. The story should have identified the campus organization offering AIDS counseling as the Gay Health Advocacy Project, which uses space at the University mental health division. In addition, the story should not have said that government agencies are the only organizations in New York state that can require AIDS tests. Rather, those agencies are the only organizations that can request the tests.

Spectator regrets the errors.
