RALLY TO SUPPORT THE COLUMBIA AIDS PEER EDUCATORS
12:00 Noon, Barnard Gates

Love Safely this week and all year long.

Condom Awareness Week at Columbia has been organized, funded, and presented by the Columbia Gay Health Advocacy Project, the Columbia AIDS Peer Educators, and the Office of Health Education of the University Health Service.

Since 1985, the Columbia Gay Health Advocacy Project (CGHAP)

has provided extensive AIDS education programs to the Columbia campus, including AIDS prevention talks each fall on every freshman floor, regular information forums, panel discussions, and safer-sex workshops. CGHAP also provides one-on-one peer counseling on AIDS, anonymous HIV antibody testing, help with AIDS-related harassment and discrimination, and other services to hundreds of members of the University community. With the University Health Service, CGHAP operates a clinic where HIV-infected students can obtain state-of-the-art medical care and education about treatment options. To find out more about any of these services, contact CGHAP through the Mental Health Division of the Health Service at 854-2878.

The Columbia AIDS Peer Educators

(formerly the Barnard AIDS Peer Educators) are a group of Barnard and Columbia undergraduates trained to educate students through facilitating discussions and implementing projects dealing with various aspects of AIDS. We are an Earl Hall affiliated group.

The Health Education Division of the Columbia University Health Service

sponsors the Peer Sexuality Educators, including Dr. Whoopee's Assistants, and the Against Violence Peer Educators, as well as providing information and programs about alcohol and drugs, eating concerns, and nutrition. Call 854-5453 for more information.
